And now a few words from me:

Hi! I'm Archie, and as you can see, I'm undeniably cute! But look out, because I'll use my adorable charm to try to get out of trouble every time! My foster mom says that I have a sweet and shy nature that needs a positive approach (and lots of treats); not sure about the "positive approach" part, but I do LOVE treats! I also love when my foster mom tells me that I'm a good boy, and I'll do almost anything for food. I feel very unsure when meeting new people (stranger danger) but with a handful of treats, I can quickly be swayed. Before coming into foster care, I used to try to take over the house and tell the humans what to do and when; if they were not confident, I would try to tell them "I'm not doing that!". But since arriving in foster care, I'm starting to understand that the humans own the house and I live with them, not the other way around! My perfect forever home is one where I'm the only dog, there are no kids or grandkids in the picture, and I'm with someone who's ideal get-away is a solo retreat as opposed to a social gathering. Let's go adventuring together! I love long walks and I'm getting better in the car as long as they are no long, winding roads.

And now a few words from my foster family:

Archie is a young pup with lots to learn and puppy energy to burn! His preferences are one-on-one activities like long walks in a quiet setting or zooming around the yard. He also loves playing with his toys and chewing on a bone. Archie bonded quickly with the male figure of our household; the puppy energy was welcomed and so was snuggle time. He has been a pleasure to have with us and think he has great potential. Archie is VERY food motivated; we've been using breakfast time to work on slowing down at the door and basic commands like come, sit and stay. He loves food games like treat puzzles and (frozen) Kong's.

Archie does not do well in busy, populated environments. This is when we start to see his nervousness and reactive tendencies come out. Archie needs a loving hand that will provide patience and stability as he is exposed to new people, places and things! His new owners should have some behavioural experience to support him. His ideal home is one with an active single owner or owners with no children or visiting grandchildren, and no plans to have children in the future. Archie is generally not a fan of dogs, and while he can be around them, he should never be in a doggie daycare/large group/dog park situation.
